

In addition to learning some valuable life skills (more than a few students asked for copies of the spectacular recipes), these 16 and 17 years-olds learned about the critical services provided by the Victoria Women's Transition House to Victoria women and youth in crisis. It was a night to remember for all involved, and promises to be the first of many "souper" events for the Claremont community.

'Souper Thanks' to Sean Hayes who has brought our program to Claremont and engaged his students in the art of soup-making and philanthropy.
